Cultivating a Positive Learning Environment

AMOGH VELLORE

MS2 Student

"Amogh was one of the first people who made the lab feel approachable when I was still getting my bearings. He was always open to questions, no matter how small, and he answered every one with patience and a genuinely positive attitude that made it easy to keep learning. What stood out most was his knack for innovation. Whether it was thinking through a grant, shaping a proposal, or helping me tighten up my writing, he was always looking for the better way to do something rather than settling for what already worked. Watching him approach problems that way taught me a lot about the kind of researcher I want to be. He made mentoring feel natural rather than a request, and I'm grateful for the time he took to help me learn and for the example he set."
