

Pitt Med Professionalism Accolade

CONGRATULATIONS!

Nicholas D'Angelo
MS1 Student

During our Behavioral Medicine course, we discuss behavior modification. This can be challenging because the topics we discuss with patients are inherently personal and are informed by our life experiences with behavior modification. We expect vulnerability from the patients we interview without ever having to expose our own insecurities and struggles with change.

...I really appreciated [Nick's] vulnerability and willingness to share his experience. I learned a lot from Nick and believe his ability to empathize with patients will make him an excellent physician!

Thank you for always being engaged in class and actively participating in patient discussions. It shows how much you care about the patients.

-- Submitted by a medical student Spring 2023

University of Pittsburgh

Office of the Learning
Environment
School of Medicine

www.ole.pitt.edu/PAIR